From the service of Cyril H. Gaudreau (also spelled Goodrow), U.S. Naval Reserve, Seaman 2nd Class; U.S. S.C. #128 (Sub Chaser) and U.S. Naval Base #25, Corfu, Greece:

Boat flag No. 9, U.S. Navy; removed from S.C. #128 when decommissioned July 5, 1919; according to recollections of Seaman Gaudreau he removed it from the boat as the last seaman on board; wool flag with a 13 star field and 9 stripes; stamped on edge: U.S. Boat Flag No. 9, Navy Yard, New York, March 1915; the U.S. Navy Boat Flag was authorized under Executive Order 1637 in 1912 to preserve the custom holding in the Navy for many years of 13 stars for Boat Flags, the Order held until 1917; No. 9 came from the patriotic separatists groups in the colonies prior to the American Revolution who adopted the separation from Great Britain sentiments expressed by British Parliamentarian John Wilkes in publication Number 45 of the periodical North Briton, April 23, 1763 and to hide those radical ideas the colonists used 4+5=No.9;

Souvenir beaded “snake,” Ottoman Empire; green and brown diamond pattern on back, white beads on underside with black beads spelling out: TURKISH PRISONERS 1918 and under the chin, the letter A; made by the beaded crochet method or weaving on small looms. Crochet beaded snakes were the most popular of the beaded souvenirs created in the prisoner of war camps; a snake is basically a tube, a very easy shape to make with bead crochet. Secondly, snakes were a symbol of good luck in parts of South East Europe, so the prisoner of war snakes could have had a symbolic importance for their makers; prisoners who made the items could have been from the far-flung Ottoman Empire: Turkish, Kurdish, Arab, Greek, or Eastern European; according to recollections of Seaman Gaudreau he was given the snake by Turkish P.O.W.’s to thank him for teaching them how to play baseball; 74” length;

Service certificate for Cyril H. Gaudreau, July 19, 1918 to July 30, 1919;
