Imperial Russian coverlet; Imperial Russian monogram finely embroidered in center during the reign of Czar Nicholas II, 1894-1917; the monogram possibly refers to Grand Duke Dmitri Pavlovich (1891-1942), son of Grand Duke Paul Alexandrovich, an uncle to Nicholas II, whose palace on the Perspective Nevsky was transformed into a hospital during WWI; jacquard weaving process with floral motifs and large thistle motifs; cream colored cloth in excellent condition; hand-sewn cloth strips in various locations including one in from the selvage edge about 12 inches with thread remnants possibly used to attach buttons at one time for unknown purpose; on right long selvage edge are raised letters mostly not cipherable except for “elephant” and “hen design”; there is also a symbol of a standing elephant with transport saddle on its back; possibly made in India
Imperial Russian napkin; silk with floral motifs; Imperial monogram in one corner date 12/89 [Czar Alexander III’s reign was 1881-1894]; the monogram possibly refers to Grand Duke George Alexandrovich (1871-1899), son of Alexander III and brother of Nicholas II; fold lines and some staining
Preserved by Rose (Rachel) Borochowitch Bronfenbrenner, a nurse in the Royal Russian Order of Nurses. She served in the Winter Palace during the 1917 Revolution. According to descendants, Nurse Bronfenbrenner traded her linens for the Imperial Russian linens. She kept the linens when she immigrated to the United States in 1922.
