Students will:

• Determine nations’ goals at the peace treaty conference.
• Effectively communicate/negotiate with classmates in a simulation situation and demonstrate their understanding of the Treaty of Versailles.
• Synthesize their understanding of the Treaty of Versailles, expressing what it accomplished and their perception of its fairness.

INTERDISCIPLINARY:  Social Studies, Language Arts

MATERIALS NEEDED:

• Headbands with country assignments
  Will need a “France,” “Great Britain,” “United States” and “Germany” for every group
• Internet access for students
• Colored pencils, markers, etc.
• Rubric for grading writing assignment (see Appendix A)
LESSON

DIRECTIONS:

2. Assign students to a particular role: Britain, France, U.S. or Germany (use headbands – each table should have a rep from each country if possible.) Students should get into country groups and discuss what each country wanted out of the treaty. Then students will return to tables and meet with a representative from each country and form a treaty.
3. Discuss the actual treaty.
4. Students will design an illustrated version of the treaty points to show understanding.

POST-ASSESSMENT:

Evaluation slide of PowerPoint: Answer the following questions on the back of your illustration:

- Do you think the Treaty of Versailles was fair? Explain why/why not.
- Were there portions of the treaty that were fairer than others?

See Appendix A for writing assignment rubric.
Appendix A: Treaty of Versailles – Fair or Not?

Do you think the Treaty of Versailles was fair? Explain why you think this.

Were there portions of the treaty that were more fair (or less fair) than others?
