National World War I Museum at Liberty Memorial Seeks Volunteers to Meet Growing Needs

The National World War I Museum at Liberty Memorial is looking to build its ranks of volunteers to help meet the growing needs of America's only museum dedicated to the Great War.

"Volunteers are vital to the success of our organization," says Vice President of Business Operations and Guest Experience Kathy Jarboe. "As we prepare for the centennial of World War I, it is essential that we expand our team of volunteers to ensure visitors will continue to receive the best experience possible."

The Museum is seeking individuals age 19 and over who are available on Saturdays and Sundays and can commit to at least eight hours of service per month. Shifts usually last from 9:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. or 1 to 5 p.m. All volunteers are required to pass a background check and attend basic orientation, safety training and on-the-job training modules. Volunteer openings are available in Guest Services, Research Center, Education and Administration.

All candidates must be comfortable using email and the Internet. Past experience or specialized knowledge of World War I is not required; however, a friendly attitude and willingness to learn are necessary.

Museum volunteers receive a number of special benefits, including:

- 20% discount in the Museum Store
- 25% discount in the Over There Café
- Invitations to special exhibits and events
- Free family membership after 100 hours of service
- Annual Volunteer Appreciation Dinner and other volunteer events
